

Up to eight egg-laying hens are crammed into cages with a floor space the size of a folded newspaper. The confinement is so intense that they cannot even fully stretch their wings, and many die from the stress.